Onto The Next Thing

This week in ISM I have been preparing for the final product by conducting more researching on creating a project that successfully builds off of the original work. Choosing a product was fairly easy, because a website combines the creative aspect making a website, the business aspect of inputting the information written about the company, and the training aspect of creating a promotional video.

Continuing to find professional in web-design will also aid in the success of creating the final product. In order to be able to have a business that reaches the target demographic the website will need be interactive and easy to navigate so both the students, who are ages 13-18, and there parents, 30+ years old, will be able to find out information without any trouble or difficulty. This challenging part of the project will be making the promotional video, that showcases the task and skills the dogs will learn throughout the program. It will require more effort then the business information because all of the training skills that have been learned thus far will have to be out into effect, and work with a dog who has not learned the skills previous to the project. Although it will be challenge, it will be rewarding because I will be able to get to work with a dog and hopefully one day get to train a dog that give someone more independence.

Overall the work being done now directly correlates with what I want to do in the future. It is interesting to see the progression of the work done from the beginning of the year to now. IT will be interesting to see the final product with it comes into fruition as well as what was learned from the process as a whole.
